

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

An area of low pressure will move across northern parts of the UK today, with showers forming as temperatures rise. The showers will become slow-moving due to the light winds. The potential for heavy rainfall decreases again this evening as temperatures fall and winds begin to pick up again.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 14:40 on Sat, 10th May 2014 until 21:00 on Sat, 10th May 2014

Showers will turn heavy and possibly thundery across southern and some central parts of Scotland and northernmost parts of England this afternoon. Although some areas will avoid the showers completely, other locations could see rainfall accumulations 10 to 15 mm in an hour or less, and 20 to 30 mm in just a few hours. The public should be aware that some disruption due to surface water flooding is possible. The heavier showers will die away again this evening.

This warning has been extended to cover northernmost parts of England where slow-moving thundery showers are likely later this afternoon into the early evening.
